Q: Under what conditions is a finite-dimensional \mathbb{C} -vector space necessarily irreducible? Let V be a finite-dimensional, complex vector space. I'm wondering what conditions on V it has to satisfy in order for V to be irreducible as a complex vector space. The irreducibility of a real vector space should intuitively be connected to the rank of the space, which is the dimension of the space. So if V has dimension k , then it is irreducible if and only if the rank of V is k , since the only decomposition with trivial invariants is $V = V_1 \oplus \dots \oplus V_k$ and \mathbb{C} - V has invariants if and only if V has invariants. What about the complex case? A: A finite dimensional complex vector space V is irreducible iff V has the dimension 1 or 2 and the complexification $V_{\mathbb{C}}$ is the trivial vector space. If V has dimension 1 , then it has no non trivial subspaces as all subspaces are of the form $\langle v \rangle$ or V itself and the only way to write V as sum is $V \subset V \oplus V \subset V \oplus V \oplus V$. If V has dimension 2 , it has non trivial rank 1 subspaces (for instance the line $V = \langle v \rangle$). I don't have the proof but since $V_{\mathbb{C}}$ is a one dimensional vector space it has no non trivial sub 1 -dim subspaces.
